Tasha, I recall when it was announced that you and Jeff would marry. You seemed to be looking for acceptance from our side the family. I told you then; the two of you had to do what made you happy, and not worry about the rest.

Understand that you were always welcome, and no matter what happened, you would always be family to me.

You were among a small handful that could talk with me on the level I often need to hear, but seldom get. We could discuss how both of us suffered through depression over the years, and I feel, turn two negatives into a positive: I gained some clarity and perspective from that, and I hoped that you gained something as well.

I learned from you that my 'aura' was blue, as you claimed to be sensitive to such things. You reinforced my own observation that there was a...presence...in proximity to me, but not in a bad way.

Jeff told me you could see the world around you in both a simple and profound way; I came to understand all the deep layers and hues between the simplicity, but we both learned to interpret that through our art and writing.

You were a rare and wonderful person. A bright light has gone out of the local universe, and all of us that knew you are diminished because of it.

“ My sweet, childhood best friend, Tasha. I am completely heart broken and devastated after learning you left us way too early. However, I (believe it or not) I understand and had we kept in touch these last few years maybe we could've helped each other. I have no clue of the weight you were carrying other than the loss of your mother but I understand, i don't blame you or think of you in any selfish manner. You are the most beautiful soul. As my childhood best friend, you were always there for me, we did crazy things all the time in the meadows which are some of my very best memories of us. You were always on my side. We were pretty much inseparable. We lived at each other's houses. We share a brother. I learned from you. Our moms were best friends. We pretty much ran that meadows neighborhood. When you saw Tasha, Stephanie was right behind. The bond we shared, the secrets, the frustrations of our parents and how sometimes they drove us crazy. You were raw, real, truthful, selfless, beautiful, talented, brilliant and very intelligent. I'm sorry I wasn't the best friend after all the years. It's easy to place blame on being busy and doing family, etc. I get it. People have priorities but we also have to make sure the closest, the most meaningful, and the most faithful friendships are worth making that effort for whether it's a phone call once or a couple of times a month. Just to check in. Catch up. Ask how they are doing and if they need anything. We need to just bluntly ask, are you ok? What can I do? I so wish I could've been there Sunday just to catch up and talk and have listened should you have decided to share any feelings of sadness or pain. I could have just listened, actually heard you, and tried to offer suggestions, advice has you wanted it. The world lost a very special human with endless talents, a heart of gold and a woman who would do anything for anyone. I will cherish every moment we had and spent together. You were always loved, admired, inspired, and respected by me. You were my very first best friend and I will keep all of our memories and moments alive in my heart. Oh, and if you wanted to come back and visit in a non-creepy way, I'd be ok with that too! I love you with my entire heart and soul. I hope you're at peace with your mom and grandparents. I love you my sweet friend. 🧡💜
